Business Value

You've done it. You've been working all year on that project, liaised with the powers that hold the purse strings and got sign off. Everything is lined up, purchase orders, buy in from the board and target users from specific departments for user acceptance testing once you've completed the work.

You're all set. The minute you tick over to the new financial year and all moving parts will achieve:

- Problem tickets drastically reduced.
- Performance to significantly increase.
- Savings made.
- Return on Investment about to really make people happy.
- Nothing short of a high five from the entire company.

Then COVID happened. Suddenly all resources in your team have been re-assigned to resolving internal issues. Ensuring all users can work remotely as if they were in the office all at the same time.

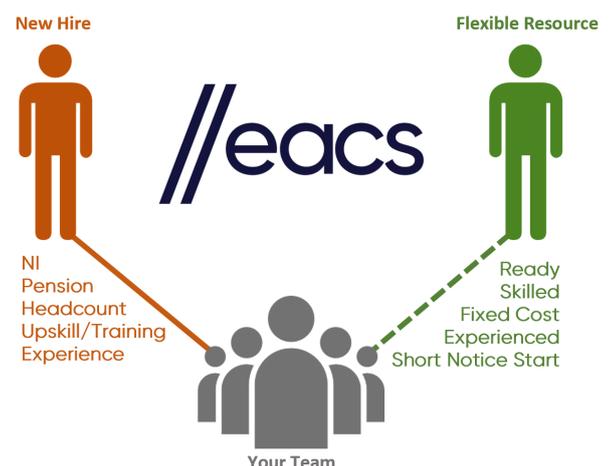

The project is still business critical. The work still needs to be done. The budget is there, it's been approved, the other areas of your business have provided contingency for just a scenario like this. In fact, since 2008 your company has been streamlined and is resilient, ready for this. You just don't have the personnel...

We have integrated a full service desk team on-site to compensate for a planned increase of internal calls to the IT team (freeing up time for your team to work on a project rather than field inbound calls and issues), specifically skilled consultants for completion of a very specific task that is under time constraint, or even just 'that' IT presence on-site to help with a whole multitude of issues with problem solving skill that have been proven time and time again.
